Executive Summary

There is a growing body of research that addresses adolescent brain development. Neuroscience indicates that the brain is not fully developed until about the age of 25 years old. DCJ has made a commitment to place concentrated attention on this important responsiveness factor for this reason.

Program Summary

There is concentrated effort to educate DCJ staff in the area of brain development and trauma to improve services to this target group to positively influence program engagement, behavior change and recidivism.

The above pilot program will be a collaboration with Portland's Opportunities Industrialization Center (POIC) to engage 17-25 year old African American Males convicted of felonies as well as misdemeanor gun crimes who are under-educated, under-employed and engaging in criminal and risky behavior. It will have components of the Community Healing Initiative (CHI) model for juveniles and tailored to 17-25 year old individuals. Forty young men will receive direct case management; professional mentor-ship; life skills education; connection with education, employment, and financial resources; and will participate in regular support meetings and pro-social activities with a cohort of peers. Over 12 months, each client will work through intake, assessment, goal mapping, completion of program curriculum, progressing toward achievement of case plan goals.

This program will focus on African American males only. If it proves to be successful, there is potential to expand the population being served.
