Comments:

I am concerned with the proposed regulations restricting the location of outbuildings near a primary residence. As someone that grew up on a working farm, there are numerous reasons why this can be undesirable as well as impractical. Most shops, barns and livestock facilities are located away from the primary residence. This keeps the house away from the noise, visual impact and yes sometimes smell of these ancillary buildings. Clustering all building in only one area of a rural property should not be something that Multnomah County concerns itself with.

I love the West Hills, and am accommodating to my city brethren that enjoy cycling and visiting this area. Lets not lose sight of the rural history of this area, and what rural living requires. I can assure you that those of us that choose to live here are stewards of the land and the wildlife that inhabits these environs. I cant tell you how to deal with the homeless, out of control rents, historic home demolitions, building height problems, traffic gridlock or other urban challenges of a growing city. But I can tell you that rural properties should not have all their buildings clustered in one area of the property.

Sincerely,

Craig Eroh
