Progressive Values. Dedicated Advocate. Collaborative Leader.

Chloe Eudaly is a small business owner who has devoted the past 25 years to fighting for civil rights and social justice issues, and over two decades to supporting Portland's literary and arts community through her mission driven bookshop and as a co-founder of the IPRC.

Since 2004, she's been active in disability advocacy, including co-founding the Special Education PTA of Portland. For the past year her attention has been focused on affordable housing and tenants' rights, which is what inspired her run for City Council.

Portland needs a Commissioner who understands the urgent needs of our city, knows how to prioritize while working with a tight budget, and who will put people and our planet before profit. A vote for Chloe is a vote for making Portland a city that works for all of us.

Chloe's priorities include:

- Affordable housing for all: We must stem the tide of displacement, assist our cost-burdened renters, and increase affordable housing for low and moderate income earners.
- Clean air, water, and jobs: From cleaning up the Portland Harbor, to better regulating local polluters, to protecting our urban canopy, to deconstruction instead of demolition, we can put our environment first while creating living wage jobs.
- Livability, safety, equity: We need to repair the relationship between police and the community, make our streets safe for everyone, and our city more inclusive for all.
- Arts & Culture: Portland is known for its vibrant cultural landscape which is currently at risk. We must act now to preserve affordable space for artists, writers, musicians, and other creatives to live, create, and present their work.
