Here's what can happen when government "goes local."

We can break the gridlock – and fix our bridges – like I did as part of the Sellwood Bridge Community Task Force.

We can cut wasteful spending, and use that money to make our county safer, improve schools and protect seniors. That's the small business owner's watchful eye I brought to the City Auditor's Budget Advisory Committee and the real world experience I'll bring to the county commission.

We can stop talking about homelessness and start addressing it, like I'm doing by fighting for new tools that allow police and deputy sheriffs to direct the homeless to hospitals where they can be treated, not just jails where they are processed and released.

We can open a new chapter for parks, libraries and schools. I helped lead the fight to improve and fund local libraries and I will expand that fight to protect the core services that make this such a great community.

We can do more with less – starting with my proposal to make our safety dollars go farther.

We can stop promising and start delivering. After years of building and running a business, I know how to balance budgets, make scarce funds do more and most of all – how to operate in the reality of limited dollars rather than the political world of unlimited promises.

We can work together as neighbors. I am not a politician; I am a neighbor, activist, board leader, environmentalist and businessperson. I hope you will join with neighbors like City Auditor LaVonne Griffin-Valade, Diane McKeel, Amanda Fritz, Maria Rojo de Steffey in support of our campaign.
