If successful.....

- Multnomah County CJS will more effectively sort offenders by their criminal risk and treatment needs and their use of prison
- Sending less offenders to prison or for less time will save the state money, which will be reinvested back to local communities
- Specialty courts will be more effectively used
- More funds (potentially $12-17 million in 2015-2017) will be available for programs, treatment and supports that are shown to work to reduce recidivism

If unsuccessful....

- We do nothing to impact the number of felons we send to prison or their length of stay
- The DOC will begin the process to build a prison
- The local system will be deprived of the funds necessary to effectively combat crime and the root causes of crime
