

00:43:06 Eliza E. Canty-Jones (she/her): A great blog post by Nicole is available here: <https://www.ohs.org/blog/conserving-and-restoring-a-piece-of-oregons-afro-american-history.cfm>

00:52:33 Jennifer Burns, Old Aurora Colony Museum: Love this and have already it use it to find Aurora related items for Aurora Colony Museum. What percentage of the object collection is available through the Portal?

00:58:32 Scott: How many years will it take to process the "backlog" of 90 percent of objects yet to be done?

01:02:51 Scott: How many photos does OHS have? What percentage of those total photos have been digitized?

01:03:45 Nicole Yasuhara-OR Hist Soc: Hi Jennifer! Thanks for your comment. If you (or any researcher) does not find what you are looking for on the Portal, reach out and museum collection staff will do a deeper dive in to the database for you!

01:03:48 Nicole Yasuhara-OR Hist Soc: Hi Scott,

01:04:33 Nicole Yasuhara-OR Hist Soc: For the museum collection, I estimate it will take decades to get every record on the Portal, with our current tasks.

01:06:58 Jennifer Burns, Old Aurora Colony Museum: Kudos to both collections and libraries for all of the work that went into this!

01:08:19 Scott: How many decades will it take to digitize "public domain" materials?

01:14:46 Laura Cray: Hi Scott, much like with the museum, it will easily take decades for OHS to digitize our public domain collections. I do not have an accurate count of the number of times in our collections, but the number is easily in the millions. This is why we prioritize highlighting collections and subjects rather than aiming for digitizing everything that we hold. We encourage you to reach out to our reference staff if you have a specific subject that you would like more information about.

01:18:22 Debbie Menashe (she, her, hers): Thanks. That was a terrific tour. Looking forward to exploring more.
