

How do I get on the program?

After you request the services, a trained Area Agency on Aging staff person will call you to schedule a time to meet in your home.

During the meeting, the staff person will ask you questions about your needs and how you care for yourself to assess if you are eligible for OPI services. If you are eligible, a staff person will help you create a plan to meet your needs within the program's limits. You may get help for a short time or up to a year at a time, depending on your needs. The help can be used alone or with other in-home help.

Do I have to wait to get help?

Some areas have waiting lists. You will get priority if you are frail and vulnerable, lacking supports and likely going to have to leave your home for care.

Help to Stay in your home

Oregon Project Independence (OPI)

Help to stay in your home

Do you or a family member need help to remain at home? Oregon Project Independence (OPI) may be able to help.

Maybe you are thinking about moving out of your home because you need help to do your daily chores. Or perhaps you need some temporary help to meet your needs because the people who used to help you no longer can.

This program will help you stay in your home.

Is there a cost for the services?

Yes. Everyone participating in the program has to pay for some of its cost, based on a sliding scale fee. Your cost is based on your monthly household income minus your household's monthly medical costs.

Who will help me?

OPI service providers are state registered home care workers and/or a contracted in-home care agency, depending on where you live.
