I moved to Oregon after being in a career and retiring. My life is filled with family. I rarely drive. I enjoy walking to hear the birds and the wind in the trees in the green spaces of the neighborhood. The sunshine along with meeting others enjoying the quiet outdoors is a daily pleasure.

My dislike of driving in the Portland area has changed somewhat when I found a weekly bible study on Lusted Rd. Every week I look forward to the drive. I like to take my time and if no one is behind me I might drive slower than the speed limit. I enjoy my windows down to breathe in the microbiome of the air in the area and feel the blessed sunshine and hear the birds.

I see families outside (rarely do I see families outside in my neighborhood) enjoying each other playing, doing yard work or gardening, swimming in their pools. The farmers are a blast to watch too as where I come from I had farm equipment to drive with. To ride to my friends home in the beauty and non rushed need for speed calms my over stressed adrenals.

The absolute favorite part of the visit other than that really cool pnw Forrest windy road is sitting on their porch for the bible study. I tend to come early to take advantage of the serene beauty with fresh air and birdcalls for all.

I'm still able to look for available property to buy and this is my prime desired area as the safety and feeling of neighborhood togetherness abounds.

I can't imagine having the area completely change.
